DEDICATION

While living in Beirut, I have had the chance to meet a lot of foreigners who visit the country, each for their own reasons. Many of them were struggling with the language, since the Fusha, which they had made a lot of effort to learn, didn't seem to help. (The modern standard Arabic or Fusha is a very decent and eloquent language that unites, and is the official language of, all the Arab countries.) The reason for that struggle is that every Arab country has its own dialect that differs from Fusha.

If your destination is Lebanon, then I recommend this book in order to feel free and confident talking with the locals.

For the love of my country, which is sometimes very hard to love but at the same time very hard to leave, I dedicate my book to my language and to everyone who is willing to learn it.

PREFACE

Some of you might have purchased this book because you already know me through my Lebanese Arabic teaching videos on YouTube. This book could be considered an accompanying workbook for the YouTube channel "Lebanese Arabic with Hiba", as well as an independent Lebanese Arabic phrasebook for new students. The channel consists of a number of videos in which I teach the Lebanese Arabic dialect. It has been around since January 2011, and at the time of writing this book, there are around 50 videos available for everyone to watch.

The purpose of this book is not only to organize all the material taught on the channel throughout the many lessons and to provide a written reference for the students who already have watched the videos, but also to offer new students a more structured access to the material where they can learn the dialect and use the videos as additional guides to deepen their understanding. The last section of this book will consist of language puzzles such as crosswords, word searches and fill-in-the-blanks that will help you master the material.

INTRODUCTION

The method of teaching is vaguely inspired by the Rosetta Stone method that teaches the dialect by using practical sentences instead of memorizing strict grammatical rules.

All the words and phrases are transcribed from the videos, so there will be a reference to the relevant video below each sentence. You will be able to hear the correct pronunciation in order to master your accent and find detailed explanations of each word in complicated phrases.

The sentences will be divided into themes like "Introductions" or "Travelling" and they will be written in 3 forms:

1. In English first.
2. Then in Lebanese transliteration (Latin alphabet) for people who can't read Arabic.
3. And finally in Lebanese (Arabic alphabet) for those who are Arabic literate.

TRANSLITERATION GUIDELINES

Since the Arabic alphabet is quite different from the Latin one and does not include the same letters, we'll have to agree upon certain rules that we'll use throughout the book to avoid any confusion. The chosen representations will be based on their simplicity in contrast with the academic but more complex symbols such as [ʔ] or (ħ). There will be a table presenting each letter and its transliterated representation, preceded by an explanation of some of the letters used. While the table might only be useful for Arabic readers, the explanation will help all readers to recognize the sounds of the transliteration. If any of the following information seems too complicated for you, don't worry, you will find it to be simpler as you go along and read the actual words and phrases. These are just guidelines you can refer to if you find any difficulty in reading transliterations:

1. The Hamza (ء) which is a glottal stop, is not a full letter and is not one of the 28 letters of the alphabet but it is widely used in the language.It's like the sound in the middle of "uh-oh" in English. The Hamza is phonetically represented as /ʔ/ while academically represented as a "modifier letter right half ring" (ʾ) which will be replaced by an apostrophe in this book (ʿ). You might find it to be represented with the number (2) on the web, as this is the conventional chatting representation of it, inspired by the inverted similarity in shape of the (2) and the (ء).

2. In many Lebanese regions, the Qaf is often pronounced as a Hamza, giving it the sound of a glottal stop. However, there are notable exceptions. When words contain a Qaf and a Hamza separated by an Alef, such as in اصدقاء (friends), لقاء (meeting), and قائد (leader), the Qaf retains its original sound, distinct from the Hamza. Additionally, certain proper names, like "Qatar" and "Quran," also preserve the original Qaf pronunciation. In our course, when the Qaf should be pronounced with its original sound, we'll represent it as 'Q'. For instances where the Qaf is pronounced as a Hamza, we'll use an apostrophe (ʾ).

3. The Aleph (ا), the first letter of the Arabic alphabet, takes many forms, depending on its accentuation and on the placement of the Hamza in relation to it, facts that change the way it sounds. It might sound as a glottal stop or as a long vowel. For this reason, in cases where it sounds as a glottal stop it will be transliterated as a simple Hamza (ʾ) and in cases where it sounds like a vowel, it will be represented with the respective vowels (a), (e), (i), (o), or (ei). The last, (ei), is used as the sound of the accentuated letter (é).

4. Thaa' (ث) is an Arabic letter that sounds like (th) in English words like (th)ink or ba(th), but in the Lebanese dialect it is most commonly replaced by either a (t) or an (s) sound. So it might be written in words as a (ث), but pronounced as written in the Transliteration. (e.g., Snow=Talej= ثلج)

5. The Arabic letter (ع) or Ayn has no similar letters or sounds in the Latin alphabet. It is articulated with the back of the throat and the root of the tongue. It is phonetically represented as /ʕ/, while its academic representation is the "modifier letter left half ring" (ʿ) which is similar to the representation of the Hamza. In order to avoid any confusion between the Hamza and the Ayn, the latter will be represented as it is in chatting forums with the number (3) because of its mirrored resemblance to (ع), letter "3ayn".

6. Ghayn (غ) is a variant of 3ayn (ع) in shape but is different in sound. The closest popular equivalent to its sound is the Parisian French (r). It is phonetically represented as /ɣ/ but most commonly transliterated as (gh) which we will use throughout the book.

7. The Haa' (ح) which is similar to the 3ayn in articulation (with the back of the throat and the root of the tongue) but different in phonation is represented phonetically as /ħ/ and academically as (ḥ) while in this book it will be represented as a capital (H) which is usually the simplest symbol of the Haa'. You might find that it is sometimes written as a (7) because of the number's resemblance to the upper part of (ح).

8. The Khaa' (خ) is pronounced in a way that is very similar to German, Scottish, and Polish (ch), Russian (x), and Spanish (j). It is phonetically represented as /x/, while its most common transliteration is (kh) which is used almost everywhere and is therefore used in this book. You might also find it to be represented as (5) which also resembles a distorted mirrored (خ) missing the dot.

9. Thaal (ذ) and Thahh (ظ) which are variants of each other, and resemble the sound of the English (th) in (th)is or fea(th)er, are most commonly replaced by either a (d) or a (z). e.g., Memory=-Zeikra= ذاكرة)

10. Finally, some words end with the sound (é), or might have this sound in the middle of the word. These will be transliterated as (eh) in the end, and (ei) in the middle.

As for the Lebanese words written in the Arabic alphabet, those ending with the (a) sound in Lebanese will be written:

1. as (ا) whenever the same word in Modern Standard Arabic ends with (اء) or (هَا) like حَمراء or عَندها, written as حَمرا or عَندا

2. otherwise, they will be written as (ة)

THE CHAPTERS

There are seven chapters in this book. The first six define categories of the phrases taught throughout the chapters, while the last one is dedicated for language exercises and puzzles.

The first chapter entitled "Basic Language" contains five subcategories: Numbers, Colors, Days, Pronouns and Prepositions.

The second chapter, "Travelling", offers sentences that you will need if you are travelling to Lebanon and the subcategories are arranged by what you might chronologically use: Airport, Directions, Money, Accommodation and Shopping.

The third, fourth and fifth chapters will contain everyday sentences as well as phrases to use around friends, family and in relationships and conjugations of a few verbs that might be useful. They will also shed light on how conjugation works in the Lebanese Arabic dialect.

The sixth is the last chapter containing phrases. It will have a variation of random sentences, uncategorized, which I have been asked to teach by viewers of the videos or which I have found to be practical and fun to be learnt.

The final chapter, as mentioned above, will consist of "fill in the blank" exercises, as well as crosswords and word search puzzles. If you wish to print many copies of the puzzles, or probably wish to enlarge them, please sign up at the following link for a PDF version of the puzzles and their solutions: https://lebanese-arabic.com/exercises-pdf

CHAPTER 7: FORMALITIES

Ah formalities… This is definitely a chapter that all Lebanese are very familiar with. We've been raised hearing a lot of "3ayb" (fault/disgrace), of kellak zo2 (you're full of good manners), of iza ma fi te2leh (if it's not too much to ask)…

Lebanese are attached to traditions. Some are still very pleasant to see: standing up when someone walks in or out of a room, visiting your grandparents every week, walking with your guest to the door and staying a few or long moments saying goodbye and 're'-catching up… I still remember as a kid, searching for my mother only to find her 30 minutes later at the door still conversing with her favorite neighbor Tante Rita!

Nowadays, a lot of this happens through social media, including a visit to your grandparents…
